
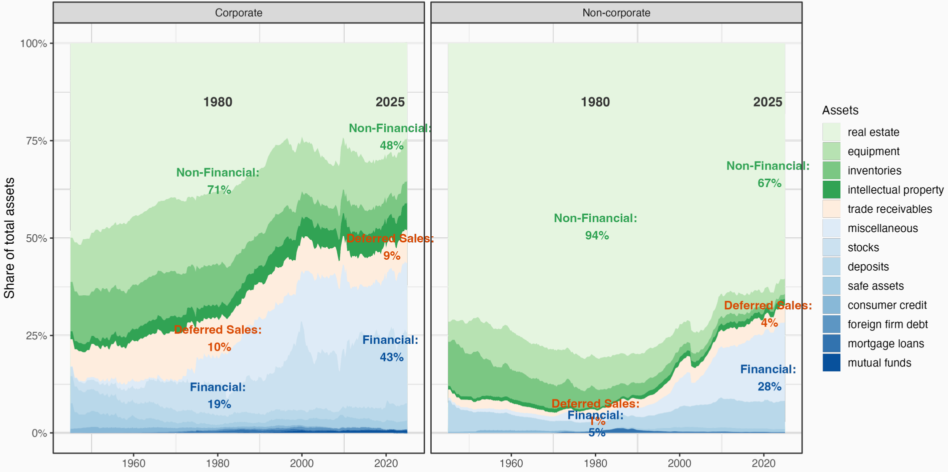
Non-financial firms' assets got more financial since 1980.

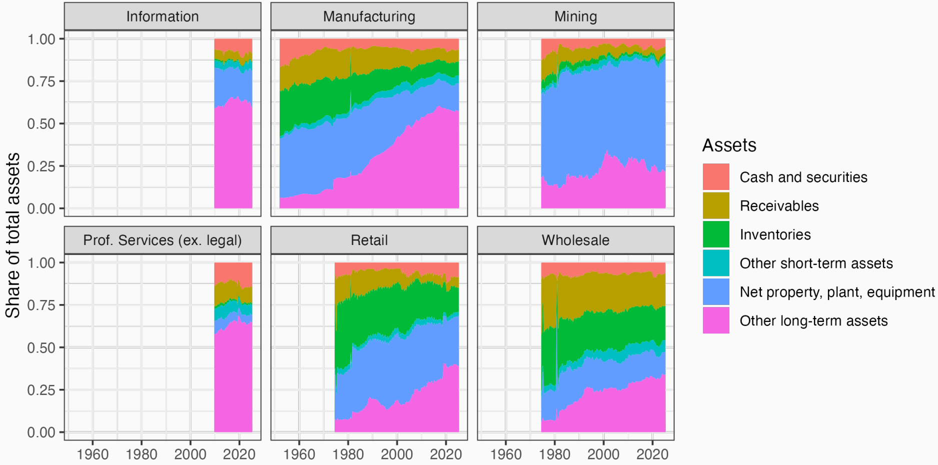
Mostly stocks and "miscellaneous."



True for both corporates and non-corporates.

Is this because more financialized sectors became more dominant?

Or because every sector became more financialized?



Unclear - long-term (noncurrent) assets includes both non-financial intangibles and long-term financial investments.